The aim of my workshop is to present strategies for self-reflection and self-organization. These are tried out in small groups and discussed together: How do I orient myself in everyday life? How can I handle the multitude of tasks that I have to master as a postdoc and individually, for example with my research projects, as a team member in a research group and in a sandwich situation as an employee, and not least as a social being with private goals and interests. How can I set and enforce priorities?

In addition to classic organizational principles, the focus is on defining individual goals, organizing support and following your own path between Flow & Grit over a long period of time: How do I motivate myself and persevere!

In addition to compact information, exercises and practical examples are provided. Methods: Input / impulse presentations, small group work with presentation and discussion

If you would like an individual coaching meeting to shape your academic career in a targeted manner, please contact me and we will discuss the general conditions and options.

I am looking forward to the workshop with you!
